Editorial Board Structure

The success of every journal depends upon the composition of its Editorial Boards. The Editorial Board with strong academic credentials and research experiences is considered as dynamic instrument to raise the quality of research journals. The essential task for Editorial Board is to develop the good working relationships with colleagues and to assist them in their editorial assignments. The structure of Editorial Board usually includes:

Patron-in-Chief

The Patron-in-Chief is usually the Vice Chancellor of the institution and is overall in-charge of the journal who needs to be kept informed of the decisions taken by the Editorial Board. The Patron-in-Chief is the final authority to approve the decisions and policies as offered by the Editorial Board.

Editor-in-Chief

The Editor-in-Chief is the lead editor and responsible for the academic content of the journal. The foremost tasks usually include the direction towards the overall strategy of the journal, reviewing and deciding on submitted articles to ensure sustainable and timely workflow and act as an ambassador for the journal.

Associate Editor

The Editor-in-Chief delegates tasks to Associate Editor and may deputize some decisions to them. The exact role of the Associate Editor varies from journal to journal, and manuscripts will often be assigned to them for desk reviewing and for the entire editorial correspondence between the authors, reviewers and the journal.

Technical Editor

The Technical Editor of the journal is responsible for reviewing the Web contents thereby maintaining the journal’s website. The Technical Editor is also responsible to review the manuscripts contents as well as responsible for copyediting and proofreading of the articles to arrange them in final version to upload on the journal’s website.
